GTA INDUSTRIAL MARKET OVERVIEW

The Greater Toronto industrial real estate market has shown remarkable resilience, remaining tight even amid economic uncertainty. Despite rising interest rates and increased scrutiny on discretionary budgets, the market fundamentals have stayed robust, with a vacancy rate of less than 4%.

The price per square foot for industrial buildings in the Greater Toronto Area (GTA) has risen by 21.79% annually, with the GTA Central market experiencing a strong 9.19% annual increase. This growth highlights the ongoing appeal of the GTA, as qualified buyers continue to see the long-term value in these rising prices over the past 5-10 years. As buyers adapt to the evolving interest rate environment, with continued reductions from the Bank of Canada, confidence is on the rise. This positive shift is expected to significantly enhance overall market activity, especially after a period of cautious capital holding over the past three quarters.

With leasing costs increasing—rental rates have climbed to $18-$20 per square foot—many buyers are finding compelling reasons to invest in property ownership. This shift allows them to build equity and avoid escalating rental payments. As the sublease market is anticipated to slow, landlords are likely to raise rental rates, which will encourage tenants to take control of their future by investing in property ownership. This trend is poised to further energize the market and offer new opportunities for growth and success.
